

Science

Saving frogs, and revealing new extinction threats

Dr Lee Berger received the $50,000 Frank Fenner Prize for Life Scientist of the Year for solving the mystery of frog extinction. Berger is based in Townsville and holds Adjunct Research Fellowships a ...

read more

Plant technology about to go viral

Plant breeding technology developed at the University of Queensland is producing crops that can resist viruses and introduce other economically valuable traits, a development that could have an enormo ...

read more

The sound of sustainability

Software developer Echoview is helping governments and scientists worldwide explore the oceans, and support the sustainability of aquatic life, with its world-leading hydroacoustic data processing.

read more

Australian power for the future

Green plants harness sunlight to produce food. Solar cells convert sunlight into energy, and now Australian chemical engineer Rose Amal is using sunlight to transform unwanted carbon dioxide into envi ...

read more